

Should India focus in Early Childhood Education?YES, Of course.

When a building is made, key thing to make sure the Foundation is strong. Early Childhood Education is exactly the same, it's the foundation for a child's development. It's important to set that foundation correctly by providing a child with the best learning and fun environment. 90% of the Brain Development happens by the age of 5 for every child, so to put that child in a highly stimulant environment and under the supervision of an expert gives them a right direction at a very early stage. This not only helps in developing a child's Cognitive, Language, Physical and Socio-emotional skills but also helps in turning them into an Independent and Confident individuals as they grow.

Although, compared to the time when we were kids, India indeed has come a long way in this field, however, quality of education for Early Childhood may vary from institution to institution. There is a lot of awareness among parents nowadays and they have started to understand the importance of this.

Now that, in most household both parents are working, its best to have their child put in a good Pre-school and Daycare where they learn and develop in all the Domains rather than having them under a Nanny. Parent's awareness has lead to the high demand in the Early Childhood Education sector and hence Government should definitely focus in this sector.
